

Community Child Care Discussion

Tuesday, October 16 6:30-7:30 PM
Starbuck Elementary School Cafeteria
430 East Hoard Street, Watertown

There is a great deal of instability in the early childhood field right now. Parents are struggling to find high-quality care for their children, and burdened with staggering costs when they do. At the same time, child care professionals are working tirelessly to meet the demands of the job while earning wages that make it difficult to support their own families.

There are several distinct and compelling sides to this issue that must be addressed at the same time if real improvement is to be achieved. Jefferson-Lewis Childcare Project is pleased to welcome Addie Jenne and Mark Walczyk to the table, to share thoughts and ideas about this important topic. Please join us to plan for the future of child care in our community with our next NY Assembly Representative, and to continue the effort toward great outcomes for children.

What are we doing for parents and children?

What is the availability of care and how are the options for families?

What are the challenges? What could we improve?

Child care professionals, parents, and community members are invited to participate in this discussion.
Please RSVP by October 15 by calling 315-782-4900 x 240 or email cbrodeur@capcjc.org
